

Questions on the Ethics of Triage, Posed by a Sub-Saharan Ant
Meredith McFadden

What do you find most striking about Frank's research?

What makes medical triage inherently consequentialist or utilitarian?

Would it have been moral for Dr. Millin to distribute the oxygen differently? Is there a defensible moral justification for giving the end-stage tuberculosis patient the oxygen?

Should priority for organ transplant rely on such determinations as a patient's likelihood of compliance with a doctor's orders? Why or why not? Should an alcoholic, for example, be considered a potential priority for a liver transplant?
